Beacon celebrates one year in Dowagiac

By MAXWELL HARDEN
max.harden@leaderpub.com

DOWAGIAC — Beacon Health System is celebrating the one-year anniversary of its acquisition of Ascension Southwest Michigan, marking a year of growth, integration, investment and expanded care in Dowagiac.

Beacon officially took over operations of the former Borgess-Lee hospital, now Beacon Dowagiac, on July 1, 2025. In the year since, President Sarah Paturalski and her team have been hard at work integrating the hospital into Beacon Health System.

"We've come a long way in that one year, even just in the last two to three months," Paturalski said. "We've doubled the number of people we're admitting here in Dowagiac, where the goal is to keep people closer to home and in the community. We are the community's hospital. We're here to serve. We feel like local healthcare is not a privilege; it's a necessity, and we're excited to be able to provide that."

Beacon Health System is a nonprofit healthcare system serving northern Indiana and southwest Michigan. Every dollar that Beacon generates is reinvested directly into patient care and community health initiatives. Each hospital is governed by a board of local community members that holds the president accountable. Zach Morris, Assistant Vice President, Business Development for Van Buren County at Sturgis Bank, serves as the chairman of the Beacon Dowagiac board.

"The board is going to be that voice from the community saying, 'These are the services we need, and we need to bring them here," Morris said. "We have our monthly meetings where we are able to express that need."

Morris has enjoyed serving the community as board chair.

Hyperscale Data Center addresses community concerns at city council meeting

By MAXWELL HARDEN
max.harden@leaderpub.com

DOWAGIAC — Emotions ran high Monday night as Hyperscale Data CEO William Horne addressed the public for the first time about the company's plans for its 34.5-acre data center campus on Prairie Ronde Street.

The Dowagiac City Council hosted Horne and John Stewart, President and CEO of Hyperscale subsidiary Seismic Media Partners, for a presentation during its meeting at Dowagiac Middle School Performing Arts Center, 57072 Riverside Drive. While council meetings are typically held at City Hall, the venue change was made to accommodate the anticipated public turnout. Community and council members alike listened to Horne's presentation, which was followed by public comments from more than a dozen attendees.

"I think that it was good that Hyperscale came out, and I think it says a lot about our community for how they showed up and the questions they asked," said Dowagiac Mayor Patrick Bakeman. "I believe [Councilmember Breanna Bundy] said it best: 'we care about this community, and we're all very good neighbors and that's what we want to see.'"

The company aims to increase the capacity of its artificial intelligence data center from its current 30 megawatts to 340 megawatts as well as dedicate more than 100,000 square feet within its existing 617,000 square foot facility to AI and robotics operations. The building is in an industrial zone, allowing for that type of use and has been in place for four or five years without requiring additional zoning changes.

Community members have expressed their concerns regarding the data center to the council over the past several months, including noise levels, water, energy and more.

Lawyers from Liddle Sheets, P.C., a nationwide class action law firm based in Detroit, filed a class action lawsuit in May against the data center for creating a nuisance by emitting consistent, disruptive noise throughout the neighboring residential area.

"As a community, we want them to be a good neighbor; we want the noise down," Bakeman said. "Most of the people that live in that neighborhood – one of them is my broadcast partner and one of my best friends. I know I can go up and down that street and name just about everybody that lives there, so I care about that community. I go down there all the time, so this is important to me also, and to the city council and city administration. When you come to a council meeting and you see us, I want to hear what people say. I take that in, and then we try to make the best we can out of that."

To address its noise concerns, the council approved zoning ordinance amendments establishing decibel limits for both residential and commercial lots. The city has sent letters to Hyperscale asking them to comply with the zoning ordinance. In response, Horne discussed the company's planned operational transition, which involves the removal of legacy equipment and the sealing of a vented wall that Horne says allows for air cooling and is responsible for the majority of the noise.

Cyclosporiasis hits tri-county area

Intestinal illness cases pop up in Berrien, Cass and Van Buren

By LOUISE WREGE
Paxton Media Group

BENTON TOWNSHIP — The intestinal illness that causes explosive diarrhea has reached Southwest Michigan, with dozens of cases reported so far in Berrien, Cass and Van Buren counties.

In Michigan, cyclosporiasis has been confirmed in more than 4,300 cases as of Thursday – up from 3,762 cases reported on Wednesday by the Michigan Department of Health and Human Services. As of July 16, 102 people had been hospitalized with the illness. The first case was reported to the state on June 22.

In a typical year, the state sees 40-50 cases of cyclosporiasis, according to MDHHS.

The ailment is caused by the cyclospora parasite, which can't be seen with the naked eye, according to Sara Palmer, an epidemiologist with the Berrien County Health Department.

"You have to use a microscope to see it," Palmer said.

She said local health departments are working with state and federal officials to find the source of the parasite, which in the past has been traced back to people eating foods that contain the parasite such as lettuce, salad greens, raspberries, snow peas, green onions or fresh cilantro and basil.

"It's really a multi-agency type of investigation when we're dealing with something like this," Palmer said.

She said MDHHS put out a news release Monday, saying that even though they have not found the cause, current results point to lettuce or salad greens.

"That does not definitively show that that's the cause. It does not rule out other possible sources," Palmer cautioned.

She said the health department is making sure local doctors are on the lookout for cyclosporiasis cases and have access to the test, which is not a routine test.

"It's not something that our physicians see often so it's not the first thing on their radar," Palmer said. "There's lots of things that cause diarrhea – lots of things that are more common. We do see a lot of different diarrheal illnesses in the summertime."

Keeping history alive

Vandalia hosts annual Underground Railroad Days

By MAXWELL HARDEN
max.harden@leaderpub.com

VANDALIA — The Underground Railroad Society of Cass County MI and the Village of Vandalia partnered for the annual Underground Railroad Days Saturday and Sunday.

Underground Railroad Days celebrates the legacy of the Underground Railroad in Cass County, particularly the area around Vandalia – Calvin, Porter and Penn Townships – known as "Young's Prairie" at the time. The UGRR existed in this area from 1830 to 1860 and it is estimated about 1,500 fugitive slaves passed through this area on their way to Canada. Many stayed for a time and worked on Quaker farms. They were targets of the infamous 1847 Kentucky Slave Raid.

The two-day event will feature guided tours of Kentucky Raid sites, a living history encampment of the Civil War 102nd U.S. Colored Troops, and all day entertainment at the Ramptown Cabin in Milo Barnes Park.

Festivities centered in the Village of Vandalia, as well as four nearby Underground Railroad stations: The Victorian James E. Bonine House, 18970 M-60, home of Quaker abolitionists James E. and Sarah Bogue Bonine, and the Bonine Carriage House across the street where fugitive slaves were sheltered; the Stephen and Hannah Bogue House, 20283 M-60 and Brownsville School No. 1, 20559 Osborn St.

Historic music was played at the Bonine House to immerse guests into the time period. In addition to the tours and historic sites, vendors, food trucks and family activities were located on the village grounds.

Volunteering at the Bonine Carriage House was Paul Lawson, whose family descended from freed slaves. He traced his mother's side of the family back to the 1850s.

"There was a slave owner in Virginia who had 51 slaves," he said. "Most people had six or seven and he had 51 slaves, but he grew up with them. They all got along and when he died, he emancipated them. He said they were all free, but they couldn't stay in Virginia. They had to leave, so they headed this way. They went on the Ohio River, took a barge and floated into Cincinnati. They took a train from there to Elkhart. Some of the churches around here picked them up, brought them up here and some settled here while some kept going on. That's where I finally come from."

Volunteering with the URSCC has become a family affair for Lawson, whose son also volunteered during the event. For Lawson, keeping the Underground Railroad's history in Cass County alive for future generations is important.

"To me, when this history dies, it's gone for good. It's like people die twice," Lawson said. "They die the first time and then again when nobody knows that they even existed. But when you're young, you don't think about it. When you get older, you realize that you're standing on the shoulders of the people before you. They worked hard to get to this space. Nowadays, it seems like we're going backwards. I just try to keep it going myself."

Additional information on the URSCC's work, as well as information on donating to their efforts, can be found at urscc.org and friendsof brownsvilleschool.org.

■ Car insurance in Michigan is ridiculously high. It's too expensive to drive in Michigan, which seems crazy since we used to be the automotive capital of the world.

■ Congratulations to our new Dowagiac school board members. I am excited to see you "on board."

■ Thank goodness Cass County finally did something about the animal abuse in the Pokagon Township home. How many other homes are like this in our area?

■ Like it or not, people who were here illegally paid taxes. Many of those jobs are not being filled and thus no taxes are being paid. A path to citizenship should have been considered.

■ Underground Railroad Days was a great time as always. A big thank you to everyone responsible for making it possible.

■ Wildfire smoke drifting this far seems to be becoming the norm these days.

St. Joseph man is killed in Bertrand Township crash

By PMG STAFF

BERTRAND TOWNSHIP — A St. Joseph man was killed Sunday in a two-vehicle Bertrand Township crash, according to the Berrien County Sheriff's Office.

At approximately 7:12 p.m. deputies responded to US-12 near U.S.-31 bypass in Bertrand Township, Berrien County, Michigan for a three-vehicle traffic crash. Upon further investigation, a 2015 Jeep Cherokee was traveling eastbound on U.S.-12 when it sideswiped a 2013 Hyundai Sonata that had just turned eastbound onto U.S.-12 from the northbound U.S.-31 off ramp.

The Jeep Cherokee lost control after the initial collision, crossed the median and entered the westbound traffic lanes of U.S.-12. A Ford F-350 was traveling westbound on U.S.-12 and collided with the passenger side of the Jeep Cherokee. The driver of the Jeep Cherokee was ejected from the vehicle and pronounced deceased on scene.

The deceased was identified as a 57-year-old man from Saint Joseph. The two occupants from the Ford F-350 suffered non-life-threatening injuries and were transported to Memorial Hospital in South Bend, Ind. The driver of the Hyundai sedan suffered minor injuries and refused medical attention on scene. It is believed that speed was a factor in the crash.

The crash remains under investigation by the Berrien County Sheriff's Office traffic crash reconstruction unit.

OBITUARIES

Bill Evans

December 28, 1936 – July 10, 2026

Billy Dee Evans, age 89 years of Niles, Michigan; father, grandfather, hard worker, honorable veteran, devout Christian, and friend to many died peacefully at 3:30 p.m. on Friday, July 10, 2026 at West Woods of Niles. Although residing at West Woods for only a few months, the staff there greeted his family with affectionate comments of "Mr. Bill", and "He was my buddy", evidence of Bill's cheerful, kind, hand-shaking presence in every circumstance.

He was born on December 28, 1936, and everyone who talked to Bill more than once, knew that he was born and raised in Hayti "HEY tie", Missouri. He was one of nine children born to Elmer D. and Gaynelle (Cornett) Evans, was proud to have hand-picked cotton as a child, and attended school until 8th grade, when he was enlisted to provide care for his sister who had severe health issues. He came to Niles with some of his family when he was 16 years old, to seek a better life, and much later earned his high school diploma as an adult from Niles High School.

In Niles, Bill was first employed at the former A&P Grocery Store downtown on Second Street. In 1954, he enlisted with the Michigan Army National Guard, serving in the 2nd Tank Battalion, 246th Armored Division at its home base in Niles. He was assigned to kitchen duty, and was proud to greet and feed his fellow soldiers three-times-a-day. After serving two 3-year tours of duty, he was Honorably Discharged to the U.S.Army Reserve, where he served another two years of obligation.

Bill was then employed at the former United Dairy on Ninth Street where his gregarious personality suited him perfectly to enter new neighborhoods and sign-up new customers, creating entire new routes. In 1971, he began a career at the former Niles plant of National-Standard, where he became a production supervisor, which allowed him to meet – with a sturdy handshake – most of the folks who worked in the plant on all of the shifts. He retired in 2001, after 30 years of service, but never one to remain idle, he began part-time employment at the Halbritter Funeral Home, and its successor, Halbritter-Wickens, greeting guests at the front door for another 20 years.

Bill was a long-time member of the First Missionary Church in Niles, now Summit Church, serving in many capacities including as an usher. He was well-known for the appearance of his yard in Oak Manor, perfect edges to the lawn in the summer, and perfect edges to the cleared snow in the winter. He also carried a lawn mower in his pickup truck to maintain the lawns of several friends around Niles. He added an in-ground swimming pool to the backyard, and filled the basement with recreational items so that his daughter could entertain friends, some of whom became so comfortable there as to let themselves in, even if Anita wasn't home yet!

Many children learned how to swim in that pool, and that pool and basement became a gathering place for grandchildren and their friends, and then for the great-grandchildren. Bill was always a sports fan, bowling on area leagues when younger, cheering for the University of Notre Dame, and was a great fan of the Detroit Tigers baseball team, watching faithfully the televised games, always accompanied by popcorn.

As a young grocer, he found the lunch counter next-door at Dean's Drug Store quite convenient, and found the equally young soda-jerk, Barb quite attractive. His visits to Dean's became more frequent, and eventually, on Barb's birthday, March 3, 1956 he married the former Barbara Ann Noecker at the Assembly of God Church at 13th & East Main Streets (now Michiana Christian Embassy, and now further east on Main).

Bill and Barb lived in their home on Spansail Street most of their marriage, and spent several winters in Fruitland, Florida. They celebrated last year the remarkable Sixty-ninth anniversary of their wedding prior to Barb's death on November 22, 2025. He was also preceded in death by his parents, and by several siblings including Martha who died at 15 years old, Lorene Walker, Walter Evans, and Donna Hess; and by Barb's parents and siblings, including her brother, Roger Noecker, who was Bill's roommate at West Woods, and died just 20 days ago, on June 20, 2026.

Surviving family includes his daughter, Anita (& Orrin) Belcher of Niles; grandsons, Matthew (& Cindi) Belcher, and Jeremy (& Rhonda) Belcher; great-grandchildren, Truen, Marissa, Jedrek, the twins Ezra and Elise, and Ivan; Bill's siblings, Audrey Johnson of Saint Joseph, Michigan, Wanda McGath of San Antonio, Texas, Barbara Hoffman of Saint Joseph, and Michael Evans of Mishawaka, Indiana; several nieces and nephews; and an amazing circle of friends, neighbors, and co-workers.

The funeral service for Bill Evans will be at 11:00 a.m. on Thursday, July 16, 2026 at Summit Church, 1700 West River Road in Niles with Lead Pastor Dan Miller of the church officiating. The service will conclude and move outside for the Veteran's Flag Presentation and "Taps" by the United States Army Honor Guard. The family will receive relatives and friends on Thursday at Summit, from 9:00 a.m. until 10:55 a.m.

Committal Services will be private, on Friday, at Mission Hills. Contributions in memory of Bill may be made to Summit Church, 1700 West River Road, Niles, Michigan, 49120; https://summitniles.com/home. Arrangements were completed at the Halbritter-Wickens Funeral Home, 615 East Main Street in Niles. Memories and condolences may be left at: www.halbritterwickens.com

The Bible suggests that a human life might be as much as 80 years, but when Bill's years of employment are added-up – including those youthful, cotton-picking years – he worked nearly 80 years, and found joy in doing so. He also found joy in greeting friends, and moreso in greeting his next new friend. More joy was found – more than Hayti – in his family, those great-grands, grandsons and their wives, his daughter Anita and her Orrin, and above all, Barb. All of this evidence of following the command to love people, and love God ... to Whom Bill's last words to Anita were: "I'm going to fly away".

Gaye Joanis

December 5, 1945 – July 14, 2026

Gaye Diane Joanis, age 80, of Niles, Michigan, passed away peacefully on July 14, 2026, surrounded by her loving family. She was born on December 5, 1945, in Dowagiac, Michigan, and lived a life marked by generosity, devotion, and kindness that touched the hearts of many.

She was welcomed into heaven by the loving arms of her late parents, Robert and Beulah (Harger) Hoffman, who instilled the values of hard work, family, and faith that guided her throughout her life. Gaye graduated from Dowagiac Union High School with the class of 1964, and on September 5, 1964, she married James D. Joanis in Dowagiac, Michigan. Together they shared a love of the outdoors and crafting. From hunting and fishing, to flower arrangements and woodworking, you could find them enjoying a life filled with love, companionship, and adventure.

She is survived by her husband, James D. Joanis of Niles; her daughters, Kellie Montgomery of Niles and Kimberly True and her husband Douglas of Dowagiac; her two granddaughters, Hannah Montgomery (Ken Conlee) of Mishawaka, and Layla True of Dowagiac; her two great-granddaughters, Collins and Porter Conlee; and her sister, Robin Schoetzow and her husband Tom of Dowagiac. Her family was the center of her world, and she treasured every moment spent with them. You could always find her in the stands, on the field, and at the show ring, cheering loud for her family. One of the joys of being the matriarch of a family full of girls is that she was always ready to go dress shopping, bake pies, visit farmers markets, lounge at the beach, and try her luck on the slot machines at the casino. She celebrated it all. She treasured family gatherings where she would make way too much food, share old stories, play euchre, and laughter would undoubtedly fill the room.

For many years, Gaye worked as a secretary in the banking industry, where her dependable nature and warm personality made her a valued presence. She also worked at National Standard in Niles and later retired from the Federal Marshall Services in South Bend. In every place she served, she was known for her dedication, professionalism, and the kindness she extended to others. Her work ethic reflected the strength of character that defined her life, and she approached each responsibility with care and pride.

Her faith was an important part of her life. She was a previous member of Trinity Episcopal Church in Niles and later a member of Fairland Christian Church in Niles. She found comfort and strength in her Christian beliefs, and she lived in a way that reflected compassion, humility, and trust in the Lord. Her church family and all who worshiped alongside her will remember her as a woman who was faithful in both word and deed.

Gaye gave generously to her community. She volunteered for Ronald McDonald House Charities providing meals and services, as well as, making families feel welcome and cared for in their time of need. Known as "Grandma Gaye" to women within the Miss America Organization, assisting with Miss Michigan and Miss Stateline Pageants where she could be found helping young women become the leaders of today. She was also active in the Cass County 4-H Program, where her daughters showed light horses and her granddaughters showed her beloved shelties. She was encouraging and supportive to all exhibitors and made a meaningful difference.

She had many interests that brought joy to her life and to those around her. Gaye was an animal lover and raised Shelties, and was a member of the ECHO Dog Club in Buchanan, as well as her non-official international sheltie group. She was always excited to attend their meet up events where friends quickly became like family to her. She also enjoyed hummingbirds, hunting mushrooms, and bird watching, especially from the family cabin in Baldwin, Michigan. Her sweet tooth was well known, and she will be lovingly remembered for her famous Rice Krispie Treats, which brought smiles to family and friends alike.

Memorial contributions may be made in Gaye's memory to McDonald House Michiana at 610 N Michigan Street, Suite 310, South Bend, Indiana 46601.

Arrangements have been entrusted to Brown Funeral Home & Cremation Services, Niles. www.BrownFuneralHomeNies.com.

Those who knew Gaye will remember her as funny, loving, and passionate. She had a way of making others feel welcome and cared for, and her laughter could brighten any room. She lived with a generous heart and a spirit that was both strong and tender. Her life was a blessing to her family, her church, and her community. May 25, 1944 – July 13, 2026

Billie Jean Bailey, 82, a lifelong resident of Dowagiac, passed away peacefully at her home on Monday morning, July 13, 2026, surrounded by the love of her family.

Born on May 25, 1944, in Dowagiac, Billie was the daughter of the late William and Annette (Kidman) Deming. She graduated from Dowagiac Union High School with the Class of 1962. On June 22, 1963, she married the love of her life, Duane Bailey, beginning a marriage built on love, devotion, and countless cherished memories together.

Faith was the foundation of Billie's life. A devoted Catholic and lifelong member of Holy Maternity of Mary Catholic Church, she faithfully attended Mass and remained devoted to her faith throughout her life. Her faith was a constant presence, quietly reflected in the way she lived and in the example, she set for her family.

For 36 years, Billie was a familiar face at Trackside Restaurant in Dowagiac, where she became much more than a waitress. She was a constant in the lives of so many, welcoming generations of customers who returned not only for a good meal, but to see Billie. Along the way, she built countless friendships with coworkers and customers alike. She carried herself with quiet grace, treated everyone with kindness and respect, and had a genuine way of making people feel remembered. To this day, nearly everyone who walked through the doors of Trackside has a Billie story to tell.

Retirement brought Billie and Duane countless days doing what they loved most, spending time together at Bailey Haven, their beloved place up north. It was there they built lasting friendships, enjoyed the peacefulness of northern Michigan, and made memories with those who became like family. They also shared a love of visiting casinos throughout Michigan and neighboring states, often making a day of it together. In their later years, their beloved cat, Pookers, quickly became the baby of the family, bringing them endless joy and companionship. Whether they were at Bailey Haven or trying their luck at the casino, they were happiest simply enjoying each other's company.

Above all else, Billie treasured her family. She was the heart of her family, and nothing brought her greater joy than having those she loved together. For generations, her Christmas Eve gatherings became a cherished family tradition, filling her home with laughter, conversation, and memories that will be treasured for years to come. Whether during the holidays or in quieter moments, Billie loved her family deeply, and the love she shared with them will remain one of her greatest legacies.

Billie will be remembered for the life she lived, the love she shared, and the countless lives she touched along the way. From the friendships she built at Trackside, to the peaceful days spent at Bailey Haven, to the cherished traditions she created with her family, her legacy will live on in the hearts of all who knew and loved her. Though she will be deeply missed, the memories she leaves behind will continue to bring comfort, laughter, and gratitude for a life so well lived.

Surviving are her husband of 63 years, Duane Bailey Sr; their three children, Lynn (Greg) Nelson, Duane Jr (Patricia) Bailey, and Kristi (Jeff) Fenimore; seven grandchildren, Torie (Mike) Winchester, Greg (Allie) Nelson, Anthony (Gabbi) Nelson, Whitney (Adam) Emerson, Kayla (Justin) Dodd, Jeffrey Fenimore and Brandi (Cameron) Polinski; nineteen great-grandchildren, Madison, Mackenzie, Macie, Maddox, Everliegh, Archer, Hudson, Clay, Obi, Violet, Maddy, Grayson, Piper, Rogan, Koda, Oakleigh, Luna, River, and Gatlin; two sisters, Bonnie Fritz and Carol (Bob) Hemmingway; and several nieces, nephews, and extended family.

Preceding her in death were her parents and three siblings, Sherry Lyons, Gail Wiggins, and James Deming.

A Memorial Mass will be celebrated at 11:00 AM on Wednesday, July 22, at Holy Maternity of Mary Catholic Church, 210 N. Front St, Dowagiac, where friends may visit with her family from 10:00 AM until the time of service.

Memorial contributions in Billie's name may be directed to St. Jude Children's Research Hospital or Corewell Health Hospice & Palliative Care.

Arrangements have been entrusted to Clark Chapel – Starks Family Funeral Homes, Dowagiac.

BEACON

"It's been good. All of us live in the community, so we're shopping and living here and people's kids go to school here," he said. "It allows us to have those informal conversations about how you are experiencing the hospital, how the service has been, and if needs are being met. The value of the board is not going out and having formal conversations; it's having all those informal conversations and being able to take that pulse of the community back to Sarah and the leadership here at Beacon."

Paturalski was named President of Beacon Dowagiac in April after serving more than seven years as Vice President of Nursing and Clinical Services at Memorial Hospital of South Bend. With more than 15 years of healthcare leadership experience rooted in nursing, the Buchanan native brings a proven record of operational excellence, workforce development and patient care innovation to the role.

"I'm a small-town kid, grew up in a small-town community just next to here in Buchanan," she said. "I have lots of deep family roots in Dowagiac, so I've seen this hospital thrive before. I've been really excited to get here, be here full-time and help the hospital get back to what it used to be, so it's fun for me. I transferred here from our South Bend campus, so I know Beacon Health System well and now I'm learning about the Dowagiac community. This community is incredible and excited for the collaboration and the connection. They're excited to see us thrive, which for me as a leader couldn't be more exciting."

Paturalski said that Beacon Dowagiac's staff are the heart and soul of the hospital.

"One of the things that's been really special to me from the minute I walked into this building is the people who work here," she said. "There are people who have worked here for 30 to 40 years. They've seen a lot of transition and change, but their commitment to this hospital and the care we provide has never wavered. They've welcomed Beacon with open arms and are excited to be part of the growth and the renewed commitment we have for the community here. We awarded our first Associate of the Month and she is a multi-decade employee here at the hospital.

"It's those people who are the heart of this hospital, and that's how the hospital becomes the heart of the community again."

Making a difference

Beacon has made improvements to the hospital's optimization including the implementation of the Electronic Health Record platform throughout its system, which Paturalski said improves efficiency. The hospital has also brought patient billing in-house to improve service delivery.

"It's gone really well. We're all on the same record and moving through that transition. It was probably one of the bigger ones we had with the staff, but everybody here is excited to be here," Paturalski said. "The staff have really welcomed us with the health system, and they've welcomed me as a leader. They're excited for the growth that they'll see in the coming months, so it's really gone quite well."

Additionally, the hospital has also brought in a new team of physicians to bolster the hospital's care for patients.

"We switched over to a new group this spring, and it has really helped our ability to keep patients here at the hospital," Paturalski said. "We've probably tripled the number of patients we have on the unit now compared to what we had in December or January, and that new group has been absolutely wonderful. We have a wonderful ER group of providers and everybody's really focused on keeping patients here."

"I've been making lots of connections and just really loving every day."

Committed to Dowagiac

Paturalski and Morris believe the future is bright for Beacon Dowagiac. The hospital is currently recruiting more providers to the hospital.

"That will be the key to helping us thrive and helping us keep even more patients close to home for their care. Particularly specialist physicians – things like cardiologists, oncologists, and general surgeons – anything that the community needs to stay here. We've got a couple of people in the pipeline that will be really exciting to the community."

"I look at a hospital as one sign of how well a community is doing," Morris added. "A really well-appointed hospital, which is what we're working towards with Sarah and the leadership, should have those services that are needed. The things we're going to be looking for to measure success over the next couple of years – because you don't just flip a switch, it's only been one year – but we would look by year three to start seeing these services back in the hospital meeting the community's needs."

For Morris, a strong hospital will not only bolster the community's health but also its economy.

"The other anecdotal things you start looking at are whether we are seeing economic improvement in the community because we have better health and better services here. From the standpoint of economics, we would see an improvement there as well, along with the overall quality of life in the community."

Beacon's integration into Dowagiac comes during a time when rural hospitals across the country face uncertainty amid Medicaid changes and rising costs. Paturalski said that Beacon is committed to serving the Dowagiac community for years to come.

"Beacon really believes in rural hospitals and helping them be a thriving part of the community. We are the community's hospital, and we're excited to be here," she said. "The commitment is strong from Beacon; we're not going anywhere. We're excited to stay committed and show the community what we can do for them. We should be a hub for the community and help this community thrive. That's the goal. We are incredibly committed, and further than committed, just genuinely excited and honored to be here."

DATA CENTER

Horne stopped short of revealing a planned date of completion, stating that the equipment removal will take place sometime within the next three months.

"It just made it more efficient," Horne said of the wall. "And again, the ordinance just changed. Before, there wasn't a decibel level reading or a decibel rating, so we didn't think we had issues prior to this. Obviously, there's a lot of really upset neighbors."

City Manager Kevin Anderson stated that the data center is a customer of AEP, not the City of Dowagiac. When it comes to water usage, the city said that the facility's usage has been minimal up to this point. Horne said that new cooling units will be added that will be operating on what he described as a fully closed-loop system that continuously recirculates with no ongoing draw on Dowagiac's water infrastructure.

"The system costs more than the alternatives but it is an easy choice," he said.

Horne said that the data center currently employs 25 people from the area and believes it could grow to employ approximately 500 non-remote workers ranging from robotics engineers and AI data specialists to infrastructure and operations staff, along with entry level positions.

"The jobs are going to be at our data center. We're segregating 100,000 square feet of the facility for that portion of the business. We want to hire locally."

Horne also mentioned the 48 acres of forested land Hyperscale acquired last month, which he said will provide a long-term natural buffer between their facility and the surrounding area. While many attendees questioned the company's motives, one community member who spoke at public comment asked Horne to consider donating the parcel to the Southwest Michigan Land Conservancy, a Galesburg-based nonprofit conservation organization that works with people in the community to improve habitat, protect water quality, support biodiversity and more.

While Horne did not comment on that proposal, Bakeman was intrigued by the possibility.

"When it comes to land, especially a transaction between two people, when you own land you get to choose what you want to do with it," Bakeman said. "If they wanted to donate that, that would be great. We'll have to see what they want to do."

'Empty promises'

Horne's presentation drew criticism from more than a dozen attendees across a variety of topics, with community members waiting for tangible evidence that the company is taking the concerns to heart.

George Dodd has lived next to the current data center for 56 years. While he is not opposed to AI in general, he said that the noise pollution is disrupting the quality of life in the neighborhood and needs to be addressed immediately.

"I worked in an automotive business turning brake drums on big diesel trucks, and that singing noise that comes off those drums in a closed room is what you experience," he said. "I think AI is here to stay. I don't think anybody's going to run it out, but we need to have something done about the noise that we can measure… We have property in the back that's all woods; we can't go back there and enjoy it. The animals have not come up into the yard except for squirrels and birds. My wife does gardening; we have no butterflies or bees, just a fraction of what used to be there."

Like many who spoke during the public comment portion of the meeting, Dodd responded to Hyperscale's offer to purchase homes for residents who no longer want to live in the neighborhood.

"I'd like to see the noise be taken care of, and as far as buying out houses, you'd have to give me three times what it cost for my house. I don't want to be bought out."

After the meeting, Horne clarified his intent about the offer to purchase homes.

"I don't want the houses. They don't do me any good, but I also don't want neighbors that feel trapped," he said. "It's the only reason we put the offer out there. If not one neighbor takes it, that's great for me. It means I've made everyone happy with the other alterations and changes that we've done."

District 17 State Senate Candidate Brett Muchow, of Buchanan, attended the meeting and urged Hyperscale to offer a proper timeline for its plans to address the noise pollution.

"From today's meeting, I can see there is fear that there are a lot of empty promises," he said. "I see a lot of vague statements about what's going to happen and what may happen without any really real information about what is going to happen. I see a lot of broken trust here in the public, not only with Hyperscale, but with the city council as well. It's very obvious that if they're breaking a noise ordinance and they're not doing anything to mitigate that problem, then something needs to be done immediately, and it needs to be done by the city council. I wonder if they have the tools to actually enforce those resources."

'Actions will speak for themselves'

Bakeman thanked everyone for their participation in Monday's meeting. When asked what he thought about Horne's plans, Bakeman said he wants to see action.

"The biggest common theme I heard tonight was noise, being a good neighbor and trust. When that noise comes down and the neighborhood is happier, those actions will speak for themselves," he said. "That would be a good step for us because they're not on our power and they already are limited on water and what they can put back into the system. We already have those ordinances… I think when you look at commitments and trust, it's kind of like being a coach or a parent. I do a lot of coaching with youth and with my own kids. Trust is not words; it's actions.

"When we see the right actions that we want, that's when we build trust," Bakeman continued. "We can say all the words we want, but until you put those into motion and you follow through with what you say, it's just words. I'm hoping that this will work out for them and it'll work out for the neighborhood."

During his presentation, Horne said that the company is committed to being "good neighbors" with the community. When asked about Hyperscale's relationship with the city, Horne told reporters that there is none.

"When we have a building permit that we want to submit, obviously we submit it to the city manager's office, and that's really about the extent of it right here. I wouldn't call it a relationship, I would call it a regulatory body we have to deal with," he said. "We have to dot our I's and cross our T's when we're dealing with them. They certainly do not just rubber-stamp anything. They make sure that, as I think you guys can see, we go through the effort of really listening to the critiques of the county and the city and make sure that we take that into consideration when we are submitting our permits. We hope that we submit good permits. I guess we'll see."

When asked about Horne's comment, Bakeman said the city aims to communicate and collaborate with local businesses as long as said businesses do not interfere with local quality of life.

"The last time, I put out an open letter, and that's what got it started. I'm not hard to find," Bakeman said. "I'm probably the easiest guy to find around, so I'm available all the time. They can talk through our city administrator, or they can talk to me. We are prepared to talk. This community has always had a long record of working with businesses, and that's what we want to continue to do, but we don't want it to come at a cost to a neighborhood. We have to protect the neighborhood, and that's something that's very important to me."

While he understands the concerns of the community, Bakeman said that the city will not stop an existing, properly-zoned business from operating in the city.

"This is still America, and some of the people that say 'you have to take these businesses away' – an existing business – that's communism, and I'm not a communist. I'm an American," Bakeman said. "We have to find a better way to work through this. I hope that they get this noise down like they're asking. I live in this community, too, so it's very important to me."

Groups team up for voting information

By MAXWELL HARDEN
max.harden@leaderpub.com

NILES — A pair of local organizations are teaming up to help community members access voting information and resources.

The Niles-Buchanan chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the League of Women Voters of Berrien and Cass Counties will be hosting voting information sessions at area churches as the Aug. 4 primary election approaches. The two organizations visited Mount Calvary Baptist Church in Niles to answer questions and let people know where to access information regarding voter registration, find polling places, candidates and more.

The League of Women Voters is a nonpartisan, grassroots organization that protects and expands voting rights and ensures everyone is represented in our democracy. The League neither endorses nor opposes candidates or political parties and aims to empower voters and defend democracy through advocacy and education.

"The League of Women Voters is all about voting and voting rights, so this is part of our core mission," said League of Women Voters/Voter Services Chair Beverly Gray. "It is one of my core missions to make sure that people have information about how to register, to really encourage voter registrations."

Gray said that at 411vote.org, Michigan residents can check voter registration, find polling places, learn about candidates and more.

"I feel like some people might not know it's easier than they think it is to get involved," she said.

"They don't realize that it's pretty easy. In Michigan, you can just do it online. I think that's the biggest misconception. Everybody's votes count. Collectively, we as voters have power."

Founded in 1909, the NAACP is an interracial endeavor striving to ensure the political, educational, social, and economic equality of rights of all persons and to eliminate race-based discrimination.

The NAACP Niles chapter began in March 1942 and had been a voice for human equality by addressing local issues through advocacy and communication, as well as sought to educate members and the public on history and current concerns. The chapter was dissolved in 2018 due to low participation before being revived in 2024 by Chapter President Beverly Woodson.

"Your one vote does count, and that is why we are doing this," Woodson said. "People died for this right, so don't give it to them.

We have given out the information, we have allowed individuals to ask questions, and we try very hard to answer those questions. It is so important today. I feel that it has been a long time. We want some normalcy and we still want to be able to have democracy. We want our children to understand that we live in a free country and we need to vote. I'm passionate about it, and that's why we do what we do."

Michigan agencies grant permits for Line 5 oil pipeline tunnel project

By BETH LEBLANC
The Detroit News (TNS)

LANSING — Two state agencies issued permits Wednesday necessary for the construction of a 4-mile-long tunnel beneath the Straits of Mackinac to house a new segment of the controversial Line 5 oil pipeline.

The Department of Environment, Great Lakes and Energy announced Tuesday it had reissued a wetlands permit for Enbridge's Great Lakes Tunnel Project after a roughly 16-month review; and the Department of Natural Resources, a short time later, announced it had granted a permit related to the tunnel project's effect on rare plants and animals.

The Canadian oil pipeline company had previously secured the EGLE permit for construction, but it expired as the state and Enbridge trudged through roughly eight years of litigation over the project.

"The review concluded that the public and private need for the proposed activity outweighed other public interest criteria," the environmental department said in a statement Wednesday.

The DNR, in a statement, said its permit requires Enbridge to make efforts to reduce impacts on rare plants and animals. The project, the agency said, would have an adverse impact on Houghton's goldenrod and the dwarf lake iris, both of which are considered threatened at the state and federal levels, as well as several bat habitats.

The natural resources agency eventually "concluded that the impacts at this site are unlikely to prevent the overall recovery of either plant species."

Enbridge said the permit approvals are "an important step forward for a project designed to further protect the Great Lakes while helping ensure the uninterrupted flow of energy that supports Michigan and the region.

"We are reviewing the new permit conditions issued today to assess any impacts on tunnel construction," said Ryan Duffy, a spokesman for Enbridge.

The decision was criticized by the Oil & Water Don't Mix coalition, which has fought the project for several years over concerns about the presence of oil moving through the Great Lakes. The group, on Tuesday, took aim at Gov. Gretchen Whitmer's administration in its statement.

"Gov. Whitmer has had the power to reject Enbridge's tunnel scheme, but her administration has chosen to cozy up to Big Oil rather than put Michiganders' needs and the health of the Great Lakes first," said David Holtz, of Oil & Water Don't Mix.

Could permanent daylight saving time work now?

America tried it in the 1970s; it lasted less than a year

By DEEPTI HAJELA
Associated Press

NEW YORK — It's an idea whose time, as it were, may have come – again.

The twice-yearly changing of the clocks in the United States could be a thing of the past if legislation currently in Congress that calls for permanent daylight time makes it through. But even as annoying as some find the back-and-forth of the time shift in the spring and the fall, that doesn't necessarily mean sticking to one would go over well. America has tried it before, most recently in the 1970s, and it didn't last.

Now it's a new era, one full of people working at home who didn't before – and advances in sleep science that tell a more nuanced tale.

Could this time (shift) be the charm?

What's going on this time around?

The House of Representatives on Tuesday voted overwhelmingly to pass a bill that makes the shift to daylight saving time, when clocks are moved forward one hour, become permanent.

Currently, the shift is forward in spring and back to standard time in fall as a way to give people more daylight time in the summer evenings. But the semi-annual change has few fans – an AP-NORC poll last year found that only 12 percent of American adults were in favor of it, while almost half opposed it. Proponents of a single time include the American Medical Association and American Academy of Sleep Medicine – outfits to whom daily rhythms are deeply important.

President Donald Trump has indicated he's supportive, but it's unclear whether the legislation will pass any time soon. It faces roadblocks in the Senate, where some Republicans are strongly opposed.

Arkansas Sen. Tom Cotton, a member of Republican leadership, has been outspoken against the change, saying last year that enacting it would "make winter a dark and dismal time for millions of Americans."

Michigan woman pleads no contest to abuse after 3 kids are found living alone for years

PONTIAC (AP) — A Michigan woman accused of leaving three children alone for years in a house of squalor pleaded no contest Thursday to child abuse in an agreement that carries a six-year prison sentence, authorities said.

Conditions at the Pontiac home were so offensive that police evidence specialists wore hazmat suits when the children were discovered in February 2025.

The kids, ages 15, 13 and 12, had lived on their own since 2020 or 2021, with occasional food drops on the porch and amid trash and feces, police said. Sheriff's deputies entered when a landlord said he hadn't been paid in months.

Kelli Bryant, 35, who was living elsewhere in Pontiac, pleaded no contest to abuse and will return to court in September for her sentencing. A message seeking comment from her attorney was not immediately returned.

"This plea will spare the children from testifying at trial and ensures Bryant remains incarcerated until they are all adults," Oakland County prosecutor Karen McDonald said. "I'm hopeful the children she victimized will continue to have the space and resources to heal from this abhorrent trauma."

ILLNESS

Palmer said the local health departments contact people with the illness to find out what they have eaten over the past two weeks because it can take that long to develop symptoms after eating food that contains the parasite.

"That food history is really the critical piece of the investigation," Palmer said. "... Most people have trouble remembering what they ate a week or two ago."

Another problem is that people usually eat a lot of fruits and vegetables together, which makes it difficult to figure out which one is the source.

"We've had historical outbreaks where they thought maybe salsa was a source and it turned out to be cilantro," she said.

Palmer said the food history gathered by the health departments is sent to the state, where officials look for patterns in the foods people with the illness have eaten and if they got the food from a restaurant or grocery store.

"What brands are they? What farms did they grow on? All of that," she said. "We have a really complicated food system in how our food is grown and distributed. That trace-back process is really complicated."

She said that sometimes, they don't find a source of the parasite.

Palmer said anyone with frequent bouts of watery diarrhea that lasts several days should see their doctor.

"This infection is rarely fatal, but it can cause serious illness and it also can cause a long duration illness if it's not treated," she said. "... People can recover without treatment, but it can be a long course of illness before you feel better if you're not treated."

Besides diarrhea, she said common symptoms are dehydration, cramping, abdominal pain, gas and bloating.

She said people with underlying health conditions and the very old and very young can have the most problems with cyclosporiasis.

Palmer said the illness isn't typically spread person-to-person.

"After it's shed in stool, it needs to hang out in the environment at a certain temperature and humidity for a few days to a week before it becomes infectious," Palmer said.

She said cooking food at 158 degrees will kill the parasite.

Food that is not cooked such as zucchini should be thoroughly scrubbed with a scrub brush, she said.

Palmer said raspberries have been a frequent source of infections in the past because their bumpy surface makes them hard to clean.

She said MDHHS is working with the Michigan Department of Agriculture & Rural Development, the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and the U.S. Food & Drug Administration to find the source.

At least 34 states have reported cases of cyclosporiasis, according to the CDC.

MDHHS updates the total number of cases of the illness on its website Monday through Friday. The number of people hospitalized and the number of cases per county are usually updated weekly on Thursdays.

Here are the players with Michigan ties who were taken in MLB Draft

By TONY PAUL
The Detroit News (TNS)

There were 613 players selected in the 2026 Major League Baseball Draft, and at least 14 have ties to Michigan.

Leading the way was center fielder Brayden Dowd, who was a third-round pick by the Arizona Diamondbacks. Dowd was selected 88th overall out of Florida State. He starred in high school at Birmingham Brother Rice.

Dowd was ranked the 178th-best prospect in this year's draft class, according to MLB.com. The bonus value for Down's draft slot is $915,100.

The Diamondbacks were intrigued by his ability to get on-base. He had a .456 OBP during his junior season in 2026. He also showed some pop, with 10 home runs and a .527 slugging percentage, swinging from the left side. He started his college career at Southern California, before transferring to Florida State before the 2026 season.

"We think there's sneaky power in there," Ian Rebhan, Diamondbacks scouting director, told reporters in Arizona. "He did show the ability to slug a little bit. We think there's more untapped potential in the power there.

"He's just a really instinctual player, both in the box and in center field."

Football summer school

High school teams gather for 7-on-7 scrimmages

By RON HARAMIA
Paxton Media Group

STEVENSVILLE — The term "dog days of summer" is reserved for August in Major League Baseball, when the grind of having played the bulk of the 162 scheduled regular-season games, plus enduring a long stretch of hot weather, takes it toll physically and mentally.

The playoffs are on the horizon, but the challenge is getting there.

The high school football schedule can be a grind too. On Aug. 10, area teams will begin official practice, but the truth is, teams have been working toward the 2026 season since the spring and even earlier in some cases.

Summer for high football players means weight lifting and a couple of practices each week. The MHSAA has rules in place that limit offseason practices – which coaches acknowledge is a good thing – but a stable high school football program will have something going on for most of the calendar year.

"We've got a lot of lifting and some basic stuff in (in the spring) and now we're excited about the summer," said first-year Lakeshore coach Mark Frey.

One way football coaches break up the summer routine is by playing 7-on-7 scrimmages against other schools, and that's exactly what has been – and will continue – taking place every Tuesday evening at Lakeshore High School in July.

Nine schools were invited to participate and anywhere from six to nine have shown up each week. On Tuesday, the teams were Lakeshore, Dowagiac, Watervliet, Benton Harbor, South Haven, Edwardsburg and Buchanan.

Three scrimmages took place simultaneously, each using half of the field (the soccer field was also used). The teams played for about 20 minutes (running clock), then took an eight-minute break.

There was a rotating schedule with most teams getting in four scrimmages over the two hours. Some schools even brought JV teams as well.

"I like to get the community together, these coaches that I know from playing against them or coaching with them," added Frey. "It's great to get out here and having some competition to get better. Seven on seven isn't realistic football, we know, but it's still fun to get out there and have the kids run around. It keeps the kids engaged, especially on the hot days."

Michigan regents don't cover future of Manuel

By SARAH ATWOOD
The Detroit News (TNS)

TRAVERSE CITY — The University of Michigan Board of Regents met Thursday, but didn't discuss the $12 million investigation into the culture of the scandal-ridden athletics department or the future of athletic director Warde Manuel.

After the meeting, the board went on a "private retreat" where no reporters were allowed. "Nothing related to the athletics investigation or Warde Manuel's future is taking place" during the retreat, said Paul Corliss, Michigan's assistant vice president for public affairs and internal communications.

Instead, University of Michigan Board Chair Michael Behm told The Detroit News on Thursday that while there was no extensive report on the Jenner & Block investigation into the university's athletic department to release, the university planned to disseminate the law firm's recommendations to the public.

Behm said the university is concerned with how to protect the identities of those who spoke to the investigators and that readers might be able to determine who was being referenced even if names were withheld.

Corliss told The News earlier in the week that, to his knowledge, no physical investigative report existed, and there were no plans to discuss Manuel or the investigation at the Thursday board meeting.

The Detroit News has requested the correspondence between the Jenner & Block law firm and the board over this investigation. The university has not yet responded to this request.

The then-Detroit Red Wings executive VP/general manager Steve Yzerman speaks to the media on April 19, 2024, in Detroit.

Yzerman abruptly steps down as Red Wings GM

By STEPHEN WHYNO
AP Hockey Writer

Steve Yzerman abruptly stepped down as general manager of the Detroit Red Wings on Wednesday, a stunning midsummer change by a franchise great leaving the job after seven seasons and zero playoff appearances.

Yzerman's transition to an advisory role to owner and CEO Chris Ilitch comes several weeks after captain and No. 1 center Dylan Larkin's trade request came to light. The Red Wings' decade-long playoff drought is the longest in the storied history of the organization and the longest active drought in the NHL.

The team said its search for a new head of hockey operations has begun and that Yzerman will continue to be in charge on a day-to-day basis until his successor is determined.

"Clearly, we are not where we and our fans expect to be as an organization," Ilitch said in a statement. "Steve's lifetime of contributions to the Red Wings has meant more to this franchise than words can truly express, and I have the highest level of respect for his continued commitment to our organization."

Yzerman spent his entire 22-year Hall of Fame playing career with Detroit from 1983-2006, captaining it to the Stanley Cup three times. He has the three highest-scoring seasons in franchise history and is second only to Gordie Howe on the Red Wings' all-time points list.

DRAFT

Dowd is the 11th former Brother Rice star to be selected in the MLB Draft, and the first since outfielder Nick Plummer was taken in the first round by the St. Louis Cardinals in 2015. Brother Rice also produced DJ LeMahieu, a three-time All-Star, two-time batting champion and four-time Gold Glove winner.

Three players from Michigan colleges and Michigan high schools were taken in the 2026 draft, including Michigan State right-hander Nolan Higgins, who was selected in the fifth round by the Toronto Blue Jays. Higgins played at Orchard Lake St. Mary's. His slot value is $421,300.

Olivet right-hander Bryan Carney, a former Grosse Pointe North standout, went in the seventh round to the Houston Astros, who also drafted Michigan catcher Noah Miller (Monroe) in the 20th and final round. His slot value is $285,400.

The Astros have a history of finding talent in the Metro Detroit pipeline. In 2019, they drafted right-hander Hunter Brown in the fifth round out of St. Clair Shores Lakeview High School and Division II Wayne State.

This time, the Astros went mining for gold at DIII level and unearthed Carney, who was the first Olivet player ever to earn first-team All-America honors from D3Baseball.com. According to BaseballReference.com, he's the second Olivet player ever drafted. He joins ex-Tigers pitcher Vern Ruhle (17th round, 1972). In 73.1 innings over 11 starts this past season, Carney had 122 strikeouts and 17 walks. He had a 1.35 ERA and 0.79 WHIP.

Among the Metro Detroit players drafted was right-hander Tyler Kapa, who went in the 14th round to the Miami Marlins. The Waterford Kettering alum played collegiately at Virginia.

Draft picks have until 5 p.m. July 27 to sign a contract.

Detroit's Sewell voted as NFL's top OT by AP

By JOSH DUBOW
AP Pro Football Writer

Penei Sewell has long been known as perhaps the top run-blocking tackle in the NFL. Once his work in pass protection took a step up, he moved himself into a different category.

The improvement in pass protection by Sewell last season, when he was named an All-Pro for the third straight season, helped him earn the honors as the top tackle in the NFL by The Associated Press.

A panel of eight AP Pro Football Writers ranked the top five players at tackle, basing selections on current status entering the 2026 season. First-place votes were worth 10 points. Second- through fifth-place votes were worth 5, 3, 2, and 1 points.

Sewell got three first-place votes and won the voting with 55 points. Tampa Bay's Tristan Wirfs got three first-place votes and finished second with 44 points. Denver's Garett Bolles got the other two first-place votes and came in third with 28 points. San Francisco's Trent Williams was fourth, and Philadelphia's Jordan Mailata was fifth.

Philadelphia's Lane Johnson, Washington's Laremy Tunsil, the Chargers' Rashawn Slater, the Giants' Andrew Thomas, and Chicago's Darnell Wright also received votes.

1. Penei Sewell, Detroit Lions

Sewell allowed pressure on just 3.3 percent of pass plays last season, according to Pro Football Focus, to rank second among right tackles and fifth among all tackles. He was also the game's top run blocker at tackle as a key part of the running game for the Lions. Sewell's strong overall play helped him win the award as the top protector in the league last season from PFF.

SEWELL

After spending most of his first five seasons playing on the right side, Sewell will return to his college spot at left tackle this season as Detroit wants him protecting Jared Goff's blindside.

2. Tristan Wirfs, Tampa Bay Buccaneers

Wirfs made the switch from right side to left side in 2023 and became the first player to be an All-Pro at both spots since the AP began separating the positions in 2016.

Wirfs has excelled at both run and pass blocking over his career and has made the Pro Bowl in five straight seasons. He missed the start of last season recovering from a knee injury, but quickly got back to his usual form.

3. Garett Bolles, Denver Broncos

Bolles entered the NFL as a first-round pick in 2017 and took a little time to develop into a top tackle. But Bolles has been the anchor of one of the top offensive lines the past few years in Denver and earned All-Pro honors for the first time in 2025.

Bolles allowed no sacks and only 19 pressures during the 2025 regular season, according to PFF.

4. Trent Williams, San Francisco 49ers

Williams still performed at a high level last season at age 37 as he bounced back from an injury-plagued 2024 to help San Francisco get back to the playoffs. Williams is coming off his 12th Pro Bowl season – the most for any offensive tackle – and is two shy of tying Hall of Famer Bruce Matthews' record for an offensive lineman.

Williams made three straight All-Pro teams from 2021-23 before the injuries limited him to 10 games in 2024. He was healthy for most of last season, playing 16 games for the first time since 2013 when he once again was a dominant run blocker.

His pass blocking dropped off a bit with his 40 pressures allowed the most since his rookie season with Washington in 2010, according to PFF, but he remains a top player at his position.

5. Jordan Mailata, Philadelphia Eagles

Mailata is one of the best development stories in the modern NFL. The former Australian rugby star had never played American football before the Eagles drafted him in the seventh round in 2018. Under offensive line coach Jeff Stoutland's guidance, he's become one of the best in the game.

Mailata earned second-team All-Pro honors in 2024 and has been a steadying force on one of the more consistent lines in the NFL.

World Cup final is set, with Argentina facing Spain

By TIM REYNOLDS
Associated Press

The best offense. The best defense.

The World Cup final is set, and fittingly, a clash of styles awaits. Lionel Messi – the most prolific goal scorer in the tournament's history – and defending champion Argentina will take on Spain's defensive juggernaut on Sunday in East Rutherford, New Jersey.

Spain beat France in one semifinal on Tuesday; Argentina, the comeback king of this tournament, rallied to beat England 2-1 in the other semifinal on Wednesday.

Argentina is seeking its fourth title and is looking to become the first back-to-back World Cup champion since Brazil pulled off the feat in 1958 and 1962. Spain is looking for its second title, after winning in 2010.

Argentina leads the tournament in goals scored – 19.

Spain leads the tournament in fewest goals allowed – one.

Something will have to give on Sunday, when the biggest World Cup ever – a 48-team, 104-match extravaganza spread out over the U.S., Canada and Mexico – comes to an end.

It's not Finalissima. It's going to be better.

South American champion Argentina and European champion Spain were supposed to meet in Doha, Qatar, in late March in Finalissima, a showdown between the teams led by Messi and Lamine Yamal in a prequel of the World Cup.

That game never happened. Security became an issue because of unrest in the Middle East, with Iran intensifying its attacks on neighboring countries at that time in retaliation to the aerial attacks by United States and Israel in a war that is still ongoing. The game was called off.

So, instead of playing at Lusail Stadium, the site of the epic 2022 World Cup final where Messi and Argentina won on penalty kicks over France and Kylian Mbappé, they'll play just outside of New York in soccer's biggest game.

It'll be a showdown of soccer's present versus soccer's future, not to mention a showdown of the teams that held the top two spots in FIFA's world rankings entering the World Cup – Argentina at No. 1, Spain at No. 2.

There was a famous photo taken in 2007 when Messi was part of a UNICEF program and posed with a baby.

Yamal was that baby. Like Messi (who now plays for Inter Miami), Yamal would become a left-footed star for Spanish club Barcelona. It is the most improbable of stories: From a photo together two decades ago, the two stars are set to be together again to end this year's World Cup.

How Spain got here

■ Record: Six wins, one draw, zero losses.

■ Goals for: 13.

■ Goals against: 1.

■ Group stage: drew with Cape Verde 0-0, beat Saudi Arabia 4-0, beat Uruguay 1-0.

■ Knockout stage: beat Austria 3-0, beat Portugal 1-0, beat Belgium 2-1, beat France 2-0.

How Argentina got here

Record: Seven wins, zero draws, zero losses.

Goals for: 19.

Goals against: 7.

Group stage: beat Algeria 3-0, beat Austria 2-0, beat Jordan 3-1.

Knockout stage: beat Cape Verde 3-2, beat Egypt 3-2, beat Switzerland 3-1, beat England 2-1.

Streaking

Both teams enter the final with impressive unbeaten streaks.

■ Spain is carrying a 37-match unbeaten streak across all competitions and friendlies into the final, having won 28 of those matches with nine draws. Its last loss was 1-0 to Colombia in March 2024.

■ Argentina is unbeaten in its last 13 World Cup matches, with 11 victories and two draws since falling to Saudi Arabia to open group play at the 2022 tournament.

The odds

Spain (+120) has been installed as the early favorite over Argentina (+275). Odds for a draw were quickly set at +200, and it's reasonable to think all those numbers could change considerably before the title matchup.

FOOTBALL

With 7-on-7, it's like backyard football in many ways. There is no line play. The offense is the quarterback, running back(s), tight end(s) and receivers. The defense is made up of linebackers and defensive backs. Every play is a pass and it's one-hand touch to stop the play.

There is no tackling, but sometimes a player's momentum – cough, cough – might just bring the ball carrier down.

If you like offense – and passing in particular – 7-on-7 is fun to watch and play.

"It is fun and I like to compete," said Lakeshore senior Jonah Chavez, who will play his third year of varsity for the Lancers this fall. "Trying to win while still learning and knowing that you can make those mistakes without the pressure being on is really nice. We're getting used to the new playbook and it helps us get ready for the season."

Benton Harbor's Isaiah Cornelius passes against Watervliet during a 7-on-7 scrimmage Tuesday night at Lakeshore High School.

Once the month is over, Lakeshore will have a team camp, take a week off, then begin "official" practices like everyone else.

YZERMAN

"This organization has given me incredible opportunities, from my time as a player to the privilege of returning as general manager," Yzerman said. "My commitment to the Red Wings and this community will never waver, and I look forward to supporting the organization in whatever role is needed to achieve our collective goals."

But he did not get hired just for his on-ice performance. Yzerman was an accomplished GM with Tampa Bay, building the core group of players and leadership that eventually won back-to-back championships. He took over in Detroit in 2019, where success on the ice has not materialized.

Yzerman's moves or lack thereof have contributed to the struggles, including failing to adequately address goaltending. Trading Tyler Bertuzzi to Boston and Filip Hronek to Vancouver for draft picks at the trade deadline in March 2023 and giving up a second-rounder to unload Jake Walman on a deal with San Jose 15 months later are among the questionable decisions.

Larkin also criticized Yzerman for not doing more at the 2024 deadline, and the team struggled down the stretch without reinforcements. Acquiring Justin Faulk and David Perron this past season also was not enough to get the Red Wings into the top eight in the Eastern Conference.

Larkin asking to be traded – with Minnesota, Florida and Vegas initially the only teams on his list – threatened the direction of the team at a time when it looked like Yzerman's position was safe. Yzerman last month said he could not guarantee granting Larkin's wish because the player is signed for five more seasons at an average annual salary of $8.7 million.

Figuring out that situation will now be someone else's call, as will improving a roster that has perennially underacheived expectations.

"I'm looking forward to bringing in new leadership to build the championship-caliber organization (Detroit) deserves," Ilitch said.

REGENTS

Manuel told The Detroit News on Monday that he is staying at Michigan amid reports about his future being in trouble. When asked by text Monday morning whether he is staying, Manuel told The News, "Yes, I am." Manuel declined to talk when approached Thursday by a Detroit News reporter.

Manuel told Yahoo Sports reporter Ross Dellenger via text on Monday, "The president and I have had several great conversations over the past couple of days. There are no plans for me not to continue to be the athletic director for the near future." Manuel was referring to UM president Domenico Grasso.

The 58-year-old athletic director's comments came after national outlets, including ESPN and Yahoo Sports, reported that a decision on his future could be discussed as part of the review of a broader investigation into the Michigan Athletic Department's culture. One Michigan blogger reported that a buyout offer is on the table.

Manuel appeared on Michigan insider Sam Webb's radio show on WTKA 1050-AM on Tuesday morning and didn't deny that a buyout was a possibility.

In December, the Board of Regents widened an investigation into former Michigan football coach Sherrone Moore to include the culture of the Athletic department when Moore was arrested after barging into his former assistant's residence.

This incident, along with the way Moore's firing was handled, sparked the university to retain attorneys with the Chicago-based law firm Jenner & Block, who were originally hired to investigate Moore's relationship with Shiver. The university authorized the attorneys to expand their investigation to look at the "culture" of the athletic department.

Manuel, who has led the department since 2016, has overseen four national championships and a litany of scandals and questionable behavior by coaches and athletic department staff during his tenure.

Verlander pumps up his team in final All-Star Game

By DAN GELSTON
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Justin Verlander used his fingers in this trip to Philadelphia simply to tip his cap toward applauding All-Star Game fans.

He once playfully flipped off Phillies fans when his Houston Astros were in Philadelphia for the 2022 World Series.

There was only mutual respect in this game.

The 43-year-old Verlander was one of the few All-Stars on Tuesday night to receive a warm ovation in Philadelphia from a crowd that reveled in jeering just about any player who was not in a Phillies uniform.

Verlander is set to retire at the end of the season to cap a career that includes three Cy Young Awards.

Up first, one more Midsummer Classic.

"In his 10th and final All-Star Game, please welcome to Philadelphia, Justin Verlander," the public address announcer noted.

Verlander didn't totally sit out the American League's 4-0 win over the National League on Tuesday night.

Toronto manager John Schneider asked Verlander to address the team and share thoughts on the importance of the All-Star honor out of respect for the pitcher's career.

"You never know when you're going to be in this position," Schneider said as he relayed Verlander's message. "You have to appreciate the people along the way. He's made lifelong friends from being in this game for so long."

Verlander had more gas left in the pregame speech tank. He talked AL starter Dylan Cease out of throwing a changeup as the first pitch of the game and go with a heater against Phillies slugger Kyle Schwarber.

Cease threw a 96.9-mph four-seam strike to Schwarber and struck out the side in the first inning,

"He could be a politician," Cease said of Verlander.

Kevin McGonigle, Verlander's' 21-year-old Tigers teammate and suburban Philadelphia native, soaked in the moment when Verlander took the floor.

"He kept telling the guys that you don't take anything for granted and if you keep working hard, you will find yourself back in this room multiple time," McGonigle said. "Be a good teammate and building relationships and getting to learn as much as you can from other guys."

Verlander, who did not discuss the speech, enjoyed the chance to participate in some final festivities and walked the All-Star red carpet in the afternoon with his wife, model Kate Upton, and their two young children.

The lone bummer for Verlander is that the Detroit Tigers All-Star was unable to pitch in the game as he recovers from a hamstring injury. Verlander, the oldest player in Major League Baseball, signed a $13 million, one-year contract to rejoin the Tigers in February.

He has made only one start in an injury-ravaged season and was named to the All-Star team as a Legend Pick by Commissioner Rob Manfred. Phillies slugger Bryce Harper earned the honor in the National League.

"I'm happy with the body of work," Verlander said ahead of the game. "I hope I can add to it somehow, someway in the second half. When I look back, I know I gave it everything."

Verlander went 183-115 from 2005 to 2017 with the Tigers. He won the American League Rookie of the Year award in 2006 and both the AL MVP and Cy Young Award in 2011. He helped Detroit reach the World Series in 2006 and 2012, along with four straight division titles from 2011 to 2014.

Verlander was the 2017 ALCS MVP in Houston and helped the Astros win the World Series that year, and was a key player for them when they won another title in 2022. He won his second and third Cy Young Awards in 2019 and 2022.

Verlander, who also had brief stints with the New York Mets and San Francisco, played coy when asked about which team cap he would choose for his sure-thing induction into the Hall of Fame.

"At least, I was able to narrow it down to two," Verlander said with a laugh. "I'm not there yet."

Verlander relaxed against a clubhouse wall next to his locker as he reflected over a career that stamped him as perhaps the best of his era.

Verlander has a career record of 266-159 with a 3.33 ERA in 556 starts across 21 major league seasons with the Tigers, Astros, Mets and San Francisco Giants. He has 3,554 strikeouts while tossing 26 complete games, including nine shutouts.

Not bad for a kid from Virginia who was sent to a baseball academy by his family to help him gain arm strength. His parents knew so little about how to guide a kid that flashed big league potential that his father, Richard, bought a most unique kind of instructional guide.

"My dad bought a 'How to Pitch for Dummies' book," Verlander said to laughter. "I'm not joking. He's like, OK, step one, you step back with your left foot. Step two, you turn this way. We were doing that in my front yard because he learned I could throw a rock pretty far."

Turned out, with a little help along the way, Verlander learned to throw a baseball pretty hard.

Verlander just hopes in his last season, he hasn't thrown his last one.

A tale of two Chicago baseball teams as Cubs, White Sox aim their sights on October

Paul Sullivan

Will Venable and Craig Counsell were in good position heading into the All-Star break with teams that had been through various struggles and came out ahead.

Progress is not always accomplished in a conventional manner, as both managers can attest.

The Chicago White Sox were tied for first in the American League Central, despite starting 1-5 and being outscored 52-21 in those six games, looking like a repeat of 2025, or perhaps even '24. They lost slugger Munetaka Murakami for six weeks in a stretch where they faced the Atlanta Braves, Los Angeles Dodgers and New York Yankees in consecutive series, a season-wrecking road to destruction.

But the Sox went 5-3 over the stretch with a rainout, and have gone 11-11 since, staying above water with Murakami now back.

The Sox enter the second half with a 50-45 record, and Venable is on track for the AL Manager of the Year award.

"We just settled in, and these guys are really all major leaguers, but if you're going to survive in this league you have to deal with adversity," Venable said Sunday. "I thought we did a good job and stayed the course in the early going when it was really tough. We just didn't feel stable, so to find our way means a lot."

There have been many surprises in the half, including rookies Sam Antonacci and Tristan Peters, Miguel Vargas' improvement, and relievers Sean Newcomb and Bryan Hudson. But Murakami is the one who changed the way fans feel about the Sox, and maybe the way the Sox feel about themselves.

It all started when the Sox agreed to his request to install bidets in the locker room.

"We got him the bidet, and that just speaks to trying to get him as comfortable as possible," general manager Chris Getz told me in spring training.

As the old saying goes, the team that bidets together, stays together.

"It's a game-changer," one Sox outfielder told a Japanese reporter.

Game changed.

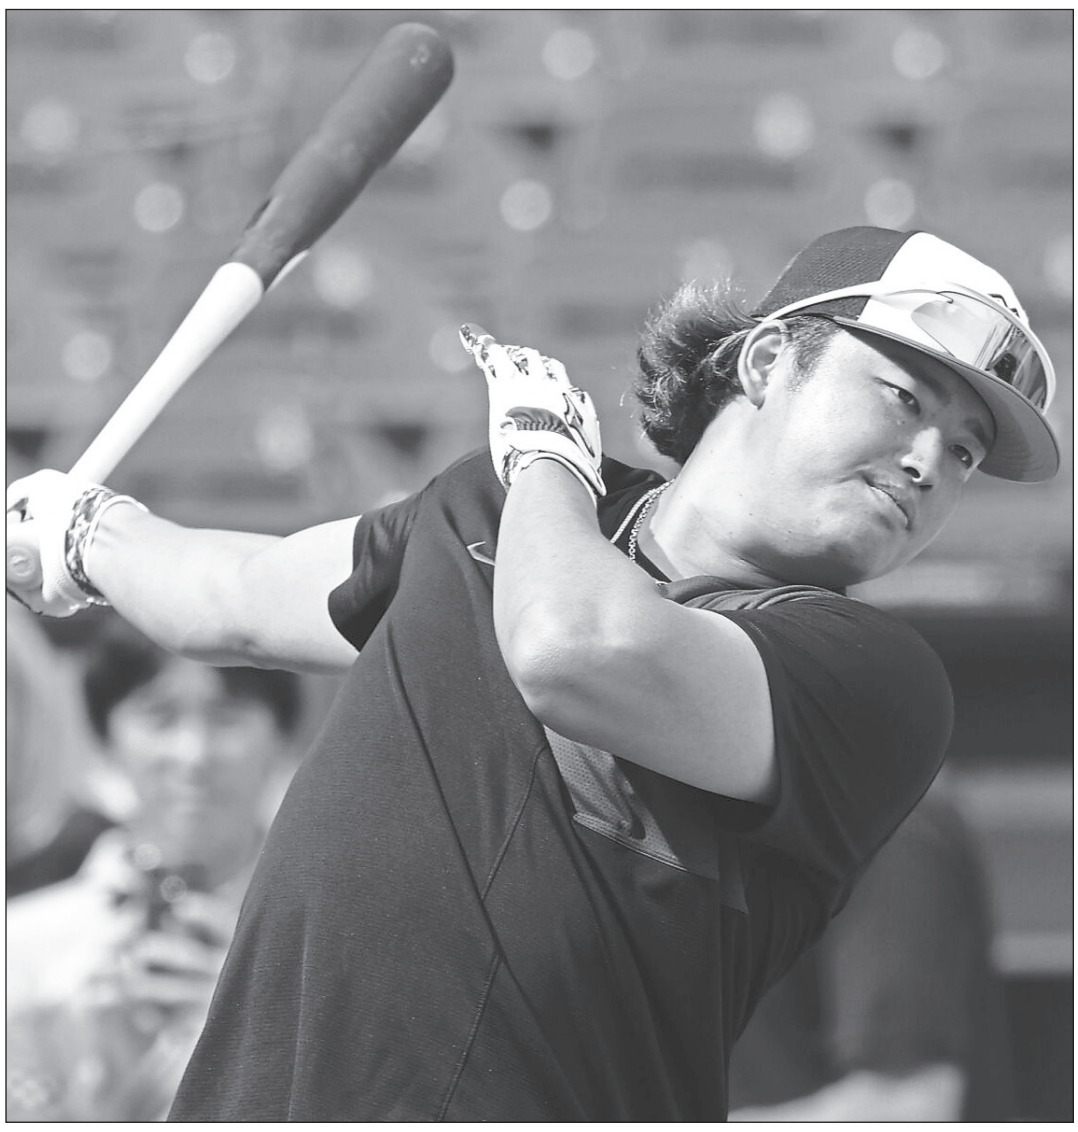
I asked Murakami in spring training if he was ready to become the face of the franchise.

"I haven't really gotten to a point where I've had any results in the major league yet," Murakami replied through his interpreter. "So I don't think of myself as the face of the franchise yet. I'll try to build on that this season."

It didn't take long before he proved himself worthy of the designation. Even the six-week absence with a hamstring injury couldn't stop the Mune Train from rolling along, and this week he made the All-Star team and participated in the Home Run Derby.

In Murakami, the Sox found a slugger who could help lift a team with his bat and help lift a fan base with his mere presence. The Sox have not had a free agent make a first impression like Mune for a long time.

He's not the only one to generate interest in a Sox team that stunned the experts in the first half after being pegged for another season of 100 or more losses, but the ovations he received in his return to the South Side last weekend indicate this is the start of a beautiful friendship.



John J. Kim / Chicago Tribune / TNS

Chicago White Sox first baseman Munetaka Murakami warms up during batting practice before a game against the Athletics at Rate Field on July 10 in Chicago.

Murakami is only signed through 2027, and if he's looking to maximize his earnings, he'll likely be gone when his contract ends and he becomes a free agent. The Sox haven't signed a player to a nine-figure contract, as every Sox fan knows, and unless Chairman Jerry Reinsdorf takes the kind of risk most other owners consider standard operating procedure for superstars, he'll be too expensive to keep.

The key is to win now, enjoy him while you can, and cross your fingers that Murakami might love Chicago enough to take a hometown discount.

The Cubs signed their own face of the franchise to a six-year, $115 million deal at the start of the season, rewarding Pete Crow-Armstrong for doing PCA things, which may or may not include Gold Glove defense, taking extra bases, home run hitting and bat slamming. (Though probably not the bat slamming.)

The sound of his initials alone drew an instant reaction, with "PCA" chants from road-tripping Cubs fans annoying the locals in venues from Dodger Stadium to Great American Ball Park to Rate Field.

Sometimes being a villain pays off.

The Cubs held the top National League wild-card spot at the break and sliced the Milwaukee Brewers' division lead to five games with a 20-8 stretch since June 11, roughly coinciding with Crow-Armstrong's move up to the leadoff spot.

It's been a zig-zag route from 15 games over .500 to .500 and back to 12 games over .500.

"Our record is our record," Counsell said Sunday. "I don't have any grand stories. You guys write the stories about the first half. We're trying to grind out as many wins as we can. That's the job, that's the goal. Keep trying to stack up wins."

A 54-42 record is more than satisfactory considering the pitching injuries and early struggles of Alex Bregman and Dansby Swanson, who leads the team with 58 RBI, including 26 in a 10-game span.

Zig, meet zag.

The story of the '26 Cubs can't be told without mentioning three things: Crow-Armstrong, the injuries and a bunch of guys few fans had heard of back in February who became important pieces to the playoff puzzle.

Everyone who claimed in spring training that Trent Thornton and Ryan Rolison would be high-leverage relievers for the Cubs down the stretch, raise your hand.

No, not you, Jed.

Bregman signed a five-year, $175 million deal and started slowly before surging in the final week before the break. Thornton and Rolison combined make under $2 million and have performed with next to no attention in the first half, joining Jacob Webb as late-inning options for Counsell.

Hoyer signed the 32-year-old Thornton to a one-year, $1 million deal on Jan. 23 after he posted a 4.89 ERA with the Seattle Mariners last year. An injury to Daniel Palencia forced Counsell to audible, and now Thornton has three saves and a 1.00 ERA over his last 10 appearances, after saving only one game in his previous 250 major-league appearances.

"I'm not sure if you saw this, Sully, but we don't have a closer," Counsell said Saturday when asked about Thornton's usage at the end of a win in Cincinnati.

"No, I mean that's what I'm so proud of the guys for, actually," Counsell said. "I kind of joke with them that when the phone rings they don't actually know who it's going to be. But they all do their jobs really well, and I couldn't be happier with what they're doing."

Always with the joking, that's Craig Counsell.

Thornton acted like he'd been closing for years, pumping his fist and screaming guttural sounds. He seemed to be enjoying the opportunity to close after a lifetime of almost no opportunities to close.

"I'm not going to complain at all," he said.

That's always a good idea when you've received a promotion.

The 32-year-old Rolison was sold by the Colorado Rockies to the Atlanta Braves last November after posting a 7.02 ERA in 31 appearances in his rookie year. He was then designated for assignment and claimed by the White Sox in December, then DFA'd again and selected off waivers by the Cubs in January.

The left-hander, who earns $780,000, is 5-1 with a 2.80 ERA in 32 appearances, limiting left-handed hitters to a .208 average.

Who knew?

"I didn't know where I'd end up, being on the waiver wire and getting claimed and DFA'd, it was kind of frustrating," Rolison said Sunday. "I knew my offseason was going really well, and I came into spring training with an open mind. The Cubs sat me down and said, 'This is why we think you can be successful,' and that sparked my positivity on the outlook of '26."

The positivity paid off, and a mix of relievers who didn't know they'd still be Cubs in mid-July are all part of the narrative.

"There's been a lot of bumps and bruises along the way, but everyone is answering the call," Thornton said.

NCAA women's tournament to seed the top 16 by true ranking next year

By DOUG FEINBERG
AP Basketball Writer

Beginning with next year's NCAA women's basketball tournament, the top 16 teams will be placed in the bracket in their true ranking regardless of conference affiliation.

In the past, the top four teams in a conference would be placed in different regions to protect them from playing each other until the Final Four. For example, the tournament this past season had four SEC teams in the top eight overall seeds. Texas was third, South Carolina fourth, LSU fifth and Vanderbilt seventh. LSU was dropped down to seventh and Vanderbilt eighth in the bracketing to avoid having them be in the same regions.

Now if that happened going forward, the teams would remain where their seeds should have them.

"We put a lot of time into establishing those top 16 teams in the order they go in," NCAA women's basketball committee chair Amanda Braun said in a phone interview. "You're splitting hairs to decide who has the edge and some of that is undone by those principles. To all of us, the work we did and the work those teams did justifies keeping them where they are in that group of 16."

The men's selection committee will still separate out the top four seeds in each conference and put them in different regions.

The change would potentially only really affect the SEC, ACC, Big Ten and Big 12 as those were the only conferences that had four or more teams in the NCAA field.

The women's tournament has started giving financial incentives – units – to teams for each round they advance in the tournament the past two seasons. Braun said that it wasn't brought up at all during the entire week of meetings that the committee had.

The change comes on the heels of the NCAA expanding its tournament field to 76 teams starting in 2027.

Hudsonian godwit makes rare summer visit to New Buffalo

Jonathan Wuepper
Southwest Michigan Wildlife

July is the month that interesting shorebirds start to show up on Southwest Michigan beaches! Some shorebirds, such as the willet and marbled godwit, are already done nesting, and are now migrating at a leisurely pace towards their wintering grounds on the Atlantic and Gulf Coasts.

Both the willet and marbled godwits are large shorebirds that nest in the "prairie pothole" regions of the Great Plains. They are considered uncommon "fall" migrants in Southwest Michigan, but are being reported in record numbers this year. On July 1, Don Estep of LaPorte photographed a flock of more than 350 willets in New Buffalo, a new high count of the species in Michigan!

The most impressive shorebird to appear on our beaches this year is that of a single Hudsonian godwit on June 30 in New Buffalo. The bird was present within a flock of marbled godwits, and was seen and photographed by multiple observers.

The Hudsonian godwit is seen every few years in our region, but usually later, between August and November. There are just three records of the Hudsonian godwit during the ornithological summer months of June and July in Berrien County over the last 65 years. The individual seen June 30 in New Buffalo possibly represents an unmated individual.

The Hudsonian godwit performs an epic migration twice per year. It breeds in Alaska, Yukon, British Columbia and the Northwest Territories in the west. In eastern North America it nests on the south shore of the Hudson Bay. It is thought that the individuals that appear in our region are of the Hudson Bay population.

The Hudsonian godwit winters thousands of miles to the south, along the shores of Chile, Argentina, Uruguay and southern Brazil. Most Hudsonian godwits that nest on the south shore of Hudson Bay are thought to migrate nonstop, offshore of the Atlantic coast of Canada and the U.S. to South America. A relative few migrate through the Great Lakes region.

All of the above shorebirds primarily eat worms, insects and other marine invertebrates. The Hudsonian godwit builds a nest close to water, constructing it using sedges, moss and lichen. An average of four eggs are laid, and both parents take turns with egg incubation.

Caroline Duncan of Benton Township found a showy emerald moth on July 1. This pretty moth is uncommon in Michigan, but more common in Indiana and Ohio. This species feeds exclusively on staghorn sumac and poison ivy!

Help track Michigan's next generation of its wild turkeys

PROVIDED BY MICHIGAN DNR

If you spot a hen turkey leading a line of poults (baby turkeys) this summer, the Michigan Department of Natural Resources wants to hear from you.

It's time for Michigan's wild turkey brood survey: a community science effort that helps wildlife biologists understand how well turkeys are reproducing across the state and provides valuable information about the health of Michigan's turkey population. The DNR is asking residents to report sightings of wild turkeys and turkey broods – family units consisting of at least one adult hen and her young – July 1 through Aug. 31.

"Summer is one of the best times of year to see wild turkey families," said Adam Bump, the DNR's upland game bird specialist. "Every brood observation helps us better understand how many young turkeys are surviving and where reproduction is occurring across Michigan."

Wild turkeys are one of Michigan's greatest wildlife conservation success stories. Once extirpated (locally extinct) from the state, turkeys have rebounded and now are found in every Michigan county.

Building on three years of observations

Maintaining healthy turkey populations requires continued monitoring, and that's where residents can make a difference.

Now entering its fourth year, the turkey brood survey is part of a larger multistate effort supported by the National Wild Turkey Federation to monitor turkey populations using a standardized survey protocol.

Since the survey launched in 2023, Michigan residents have submitted more than 17,000 observations, documenting over 36,200 hens, 95,300 poults and 15,500 male turkeys.

Those observations will allow biologists to track annual changes in turkey reproduction and compare Michigan's turkey population trends with those in other states.

"Turkey populations are influenced by many factors, including weather, habitat conditions and poult survival," Bump said. "By collecting observations year after year, we're building a long-term dataset that helps us understand trends before they become problems."

What biologists learn from turkey broods

The survey focuses on turkey broods because they provide insight into reproductive success. When participants report the number of hens and poults they observe, biologists can estimate average brood size and other indicators that help measure how successfully young turkeys are surviving through the summer months.

"Broods tell us a lot about what happened during nesting season and the weeks immediately after hatching," said Caitlin Ott-Conn, a laboratory scientist with the DNR Wildlife Division who oversees survey data collection and analysis. "When thousands of people share observations from across the state, we gain a much clearer picture of turkey reproduction than we could through traditional surveys alone."

How to participate

Anyone can contribute to the turkey brood survey. Between July 1 and Aug. 31, simply report any wild turkey sightings using the online survey form available on the turkey brood survey webpage.

Participants will be asked a few short questions about:

The date of the observation.

The location.

The number of hens observed.

The number of poults observed.

The number of gobblers (adult males) or jakes (juvenile males, about a year old) observed.

Most reports take only a minute or two to complete. The survey uses an email login so observations can be associated with individual participants, helping biologists better analyze the data. Report turkey sightings.

Every observation matters

Whether you see a single hen with two poults or a large flock of turkeys feeding in a field, your observation can help improve understanding of Michigan's wild turkey population.

"Everyone can play a role in wildlife science," Bump said. "If you see turkeys this summer, take a minute to report them. Together, we're creating one of the most comprehensive pictures of turkey reproduction in Michigan and helping ensure wild turkeys remain part of our state for generations to come."

Trump administration rolls back a key protection for imperiled wildlife

By WUFEI YU and MATTHEW BROWN
Associated Press

PHOENIX — The Trump administration finalized a rule Friday that changes how agencies enforce the Endangered Species Act and eliminates a key protection for imperiled wildlife against logging, oil drilling and other activities.

The administration narrowed the definition of "harm" under the landmark law – a change with broad implications.

For decades, the government defined harm broadly to include encroachments on places with threatened and endangered animals. The change announced Friday would allow oil and gas drilling, mining, logging and and other development on critical wildlife habitats so long as the animals themselves aren't killed or injured.

Environmentalists warned the move could cause some species to go extinct by opening the door to habitat destruction. Industry representatives and their Republican allies have long argued the landmark 1973 environmental law is wielded too broadly, to the detriment of economic growth.

Administration officials said they were returning the law to its original intent, following a 2024 Supreme Court decision that limited the authority of federal agencies to interpret environmental statutes passed by Congress. They described the government's prior definition of harm as an intrusion on private property rights.

It's among a suite of changes to wildlife protections that officials have pursued under President Donald Trump.

"For years, federal agencies abused the ESA to obstruct lawful land use and burden American families and businesses," Interior Secretary Doug Burgum said in a statement.

The change was first proposed in April 2025 and environmentalists fought unsuccessfully to block it. Habitat destruction is the biggest cause of extinction, according to wildlife advocates.

"This is one of the most horrific attempts to harm wildlife in American history and a gift to the oil barons and foreign mining companies," said Aaron Weiss, the executive director of the Center for Western Priorities.
